LONDON, AUGUST 8.

Two months past, we did not know what to do with our fleet & our numerous marine. Our vessels remained inactive in our ports. At this day we have not a sufficiency of vessels nor sailors. We must now have a fleet to watch the ports of France, and threaten thole of Russia. We must now have a fleet to shut the strait of Gibraltar against the Spaniards, & another to open the Sound. A fleet is now necessary to support our manifesto, or rather our hostile conduct against the United States; another fleet is indispensible to carry the words of peace to Constantinople. We have occasion for vessels to bring away our troops landed in Egypt; we want vessels to take on board the troops which we are sending to the succour of the king of Sweden. Asia, Europe, Africa, and America, have, at the same time risen up against us, and we are now at war with the four quarters of the world.

Every thing seems to announce a frightful crisis; nevertheless, the aspect of London is not exteriorly changed; luxury becomes greater daily; never were pleasures more ingeniously multiplied. Our capital, in short, offers to the eye of the observer a striking resemblance to Lisbon, on the evening of its terrible disaster.

HAMBURGH, August 8.

There is a talk of another odd fancy that has taken the King of Sweden. It is rumoured that he has sold Pomerania and the island of Rugen to the English, for seventeen millions and a half of marks banco. Thus this valiant Prince had rather sell his troops than defend himself.

AUGUST 17.

The orders of the Prince Royal against the English, are executed with vigor; they have arrested at Altona, and at Warstbeck, near Hamburgh, seventeen Englishmen; the seals have been placed on all the magazines at Altona, and they are about to make an inventory of the English property.

A general confternation reigns to-day in the exchange, no kind of business is transacted, one single sentiment animates every body—indignation against England.

Official News From Denmark,

KEIL, August 18.

Mr. Jackson being sent to the Prince Royal as a negociator for England, brought to Kiel the demands of that power. Without announcing any reason, England required an offensive and defensive alliance. As a guarantee of this alliance, she demanded that the Danish fleet, the Fortress of Cronenburg, and the City of Copenhagen, should be delivered up to her. The Prince Royal rejected such propositions with all the indignation they deserved. He said to Mr. Jackson, that history did not afford a single example of an attack so odious, as that with which Denmark was menaced, & that more loyalty might be expected from the Barbary pirates, than from the English Government. "You propose your alliance," added this Prince:—"Ah! do we not know what your alliance is! Your allies, by waising in vain during a whole year for your succours, have taught us the value of it!"

On the 13th of August, Mr. Jackson declared that hostilities were going to commence. From that moment the whole city
