1801 Map of Tennessee

This early map of Tennessee is from American Pocket Atlas of 1801 by Mathew Carey. This is one of the very first American maps of Tennessee. Carey's first version of a map of Tennessee was originally made in 1796. Carey updated his maps in subsequent versions, unlike other contemporary cartographers, and this 1801 example from the Pocket Atlas is a good example of this. In the intervening 5 years since his first version, Carey had received information on the various roads in the state, and he first added this information in the 1801 edition and then added even more roads to this 1805 edition. This is a superb illustration of what was known and what routes were developed at an early date in Tennessee.

This pocket atlas featured tri-fold (and larger) maps as you can see from the cover image. It consisted of 119 pages and engraved 19 maps, some in color, with a large frontspiece map of the United States. Copies of the original in good condition currently bring in the range of between $3,000 and $4,000.

In 1663, King Charles II of England included Tennessee in the grant of the Carolina, and the earliest visit by the English was about 1673. It remained largely unsettled until after the end of the French and Indian War in 1763. The first settlers were from Virginia and North Carolina in about 1769. North Carolina gave up Tennessee in 1784, ceding it to the United States. When the federal government didn't accept this new area, the residents formed the State of Franklin. This lasted for four years, at which time the territory reverted to North Carolina. In 1789 North Carolina again ceded the area to the United States and it formed the Southwest Territory in 1790.

In 1861, during the War Between the States, Tennessee seceded from the Union. Approximately 110,000 soldiers served the Confederacy and 31,000, mostly from east Tennessee, served in the Union forces. Tennessee was re-admitted into the Union in 1866.

Tennessee had a fairly large population of Franklins. Prior to the War, there were a significant number who had extensive slave holdings.

Letter from the Editor

The first volume of the year, this one consists of the early U.S. census for the state of Tennessee. The indexes to the 1830 and 1850 US Census for Tennessee were published previously in Volumes 20 and 5 respectively. Volume 20 was largely devoted to Tennessee, and Franklin marriages in Tennessee from the Vital Records index were published in Volume 28. One unusual fact concerning these census records is that although I have not abstracted the slave schedules of 1850 and 1860, the 1830 and 1840 census include a number of Franklins who had large numbers of slaves. This is also reflected in the large amounts listed in "Personal Property" in the 1860 census.

The earliest census here is the 1820. Concerning the earlier census, the 1790 and 1800 were not taken because Tennessee did not actually exist. The only part of the 1810 Census that still exists for Tennessee is Rutherford County. There were no Franklins enumerated there.

I have been thinking more about the "how and why" for publishing census records. In many ways it is in fact easier to find census records by using one of the on-line search engines than it is to search these issues. To add extra value to this form of census information I have added many footnotes, making this not just a repetition of the census data, but making it what is called an "annotated" census. The additional information includes references to:

- Tennessee marriage records (as published in FFRU Volume 28 and other FFRU volumes)
- One previous census and one following census. For example, the 1850 has references to the 1840 and the 1860 census. Frequently, a person will be listed with just their initials in one census and with the full name in another. I have paid special attention to these, attempting to cross-reference and identify these individuals. For common names, it is sometimes difficult to match these across the various censuses.
- Ancestry World Tree.
- Various references to previously-published genealogies in FFRU

These annotations constitute well over 300 footnotes. I hope you find them useful.

You will also notice that I have published no queries in this volume. This is because, although I have received quite a few queries since publishing the last volume, I don't have space here. They will appear in the next volume (53).
